

Split Ticket Atlas

Republican Presidential vs. Senate Candidate Performance, 2018-2020

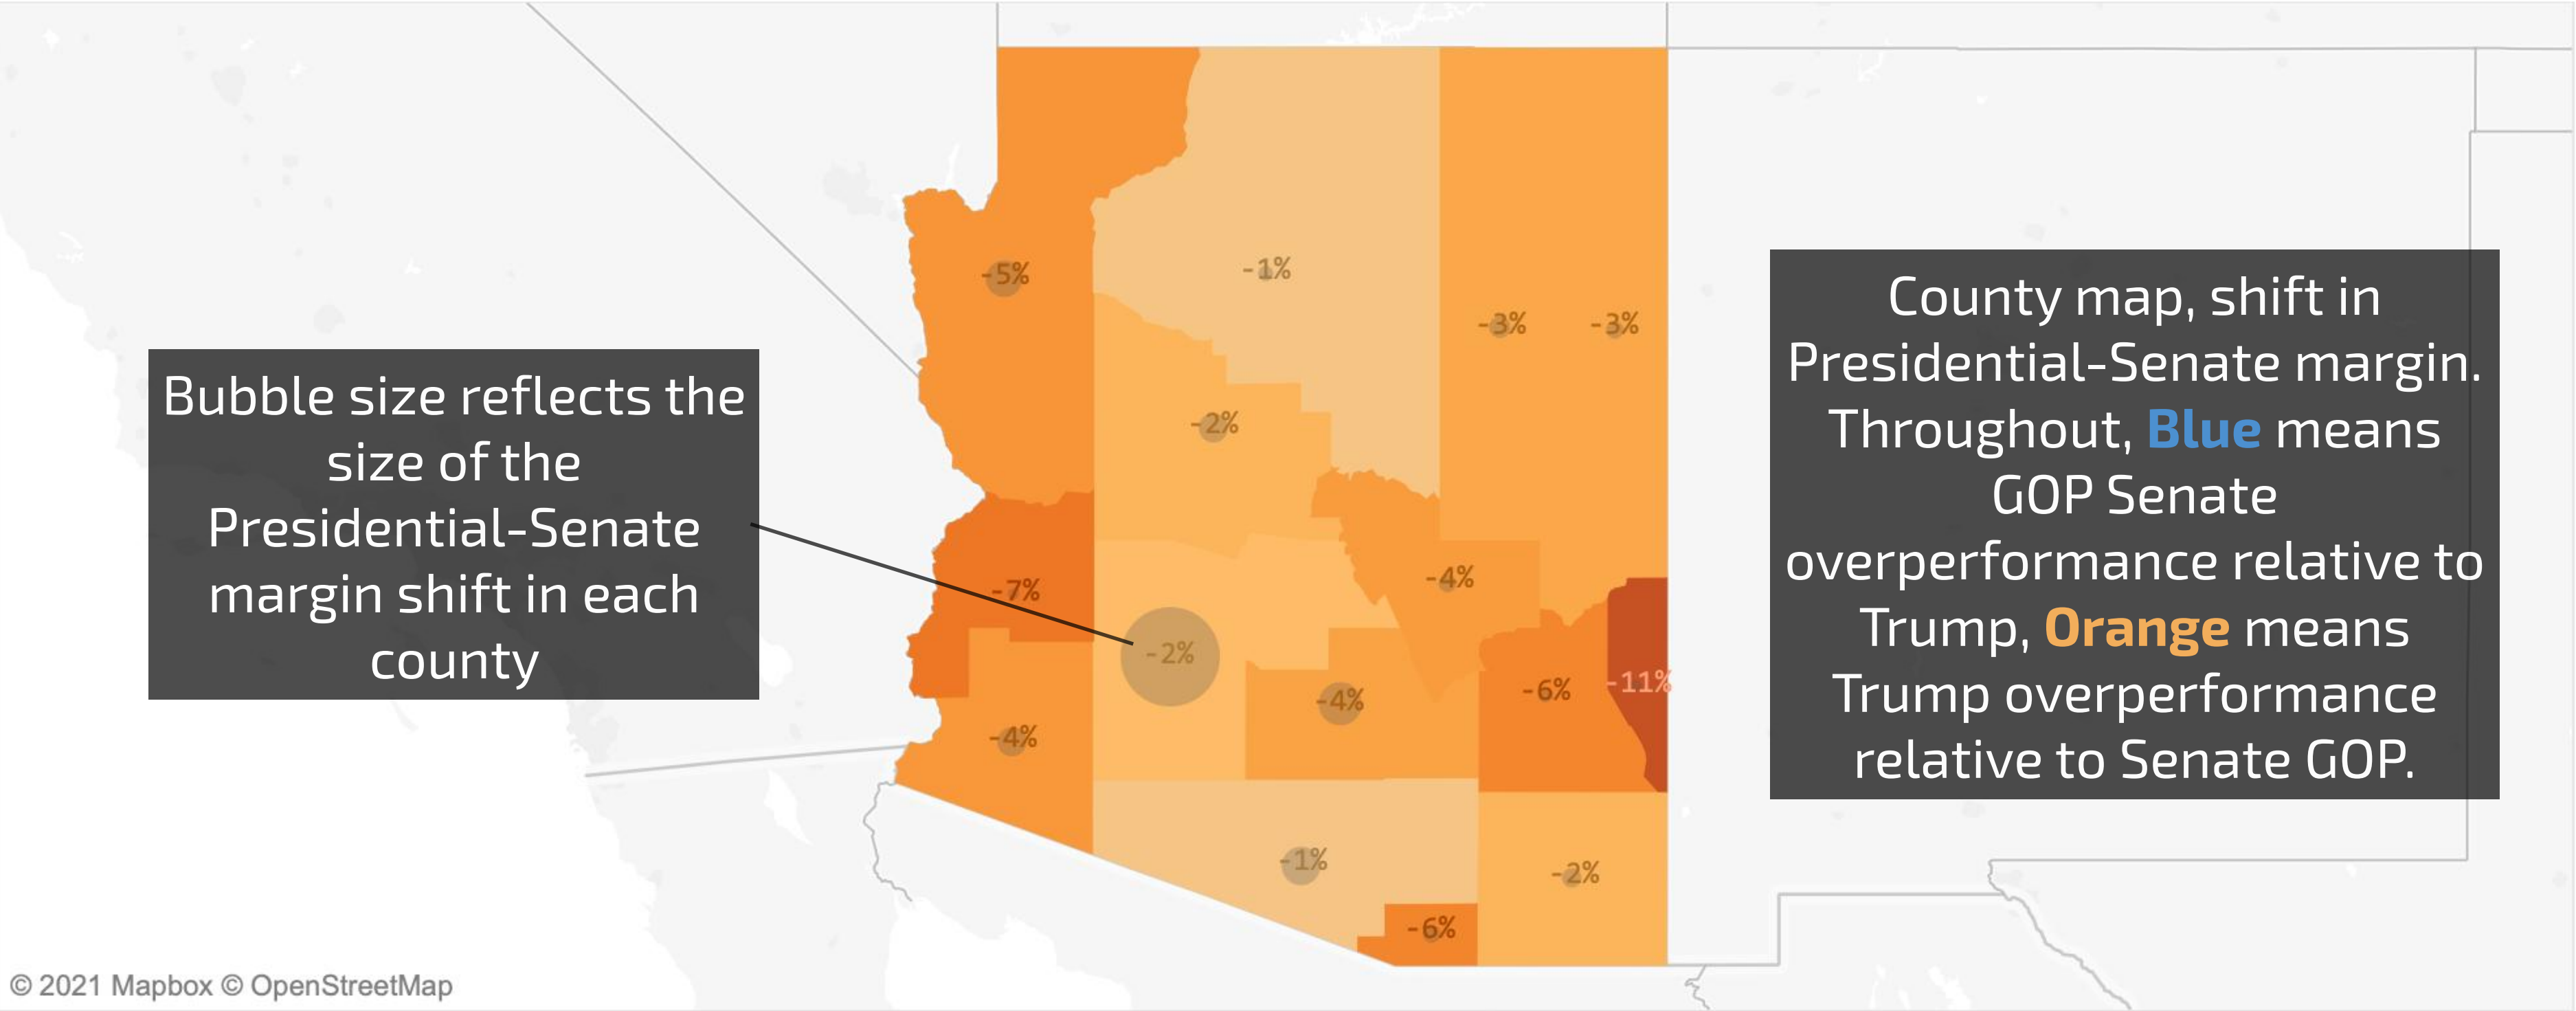

Overview

- Split-ticket voting made a small but significant difference across the country in the 2020 cycle. Across the most closely contested Senate states, Republican candidates overperformed Donald Trump by a 1.4 point margin.
 - The strongest Senate overperformers were Susan Collins, who ran 17.7 points ahead of Trump in Maine and Ben Sasse, who ran 17.3 points ahead of Trump in Nebraska.
- Republican Senate candidate overperformance happened most consistently in suburban and urban areas across the country, while Trump overperformance happened tended to happen in rural areas.
- The 2020 Senate Republican coalition looks like two parts Trump coalition and one part the traditional Republican coalition. For instance, while John Cornyn underperformed Trump in the heavily Latino Rio Grande Valley, he still ran far ahead of Ted Cruz's margins in the region from two years earlier. To a large extent, shifts at the Presidential level translated to shifts in Senate voting.
- There is no such thing as a standard partisanship model anymore. The supporter profile of every candidate looks different, depending on the coalition the candidate is trying to persuade. The similarity of the Presidential and U.S. Senate results masks the fact of significant split-ticket voting running in both directions, tied to the education gap.
- This presentation maps the Trump-Senate crossover vote in all states with two-party Senate races in 2018 and/or 2020. It shows the size of the "Trump Democrat" and "Biden Republican" vote in each race, and where geographically they are located, showing the counties responsible for the biggest shift (percentage-wise and in raw votes) between Trump and Senate candidate performance.
